Synopsis book

Initially trained as an abstract painter, Mary Corse (b. 1945) emerged in the mid-1960s as one of the few women associated with the California Light and Space movement. This catalogue is the first comprehensive examination of this singular artist's work, and features new scholarship and object studies that underscore how Corse's groundbreaking approach to light, perception, and subjectivity forged a new language of painting. Over more than five decades, Corse has maintained a commitment to abstraction and belief in modernist painting even as she charted her own course through her studies in quantum physics and investigations into a range of unconventional materials, from Tesla coils and neon to glass microbeads and glitter. Kim Conaty's essay investigates how the artist's early experiments with light creating paintings made of fluorescent or neon made way for her subsequent explorations into how light might be integrated into the surface of her canvases through the interplay of

Mary Corse: A Survey in Light by Kim Conaty

A vertical, cylindrical light fixture is the central focus, emitting a bright, warm white light. It is suspended by a thin wire from the top. The background is a deep, dark charcoal or black, which makes the light from the fixture stand out. The overall mood is minimalist and modern.
